It doesn't get any better than these views, from virtually every room! HISTORY: Altos de Amador or Amador Heights, is a small private neighborhood which was part of the American Canal Zone during most of the 20th century. The rural-like road that takes you to Edificio Amador Heights used to be referred to as "Top Brass Road" because the top US naval officers resided in this favorable location. There are very few titled properties on the Amador Causeway. LOCATION: Amador is becoming one of the most beautiful and well developed areas in Panama City, due to its privileged geographic position at the Panama Canal entrance. Its three islands Naos, Perico and Flamenco, connected by the famous "Causeway," originally built with the dredging from the building of the Canal, is now being expanded to four lanes. The Causeway has recently been directly connected to the brand new Cinta Costera 3 roadway which circles Casco Viejo. ACTIVITIES: Along the Causeway there always is a gentle breeze, and a beautiful panoramic view toward the Pacific Ocean and to the ships navigating to and from the Panama Canal, and the Bridge of Americas. On the opposite side, a view toward the Panama City shore, with its skyscrapers and Casco Viejo enlighten this charming coast. On the Causeway, you can jog, walk, skate, or rent a bike. Shops, a wide variety of seaside restaurants, bars, marinas, and a few hotels and condos have proliferated since the end of the Canal Zone days. ATTRACTIONS: The Figali Convention Center, where many concerts are held, the Zona Vida Entertainment Center, and the Smithsonian Marine Exhibition Center are current attractions. The Biodiversity Museum, designed by renowned architect Frank Gehry, is due to open very soon. A huge modern convention center to replace the current Atlapa Convention Center in San Francisco will be completed on the Causeway in the near future.
